The plaintiff has filed a motion for leave to file an amended complaint. His motion must be denied, since the proposed amendment would be futile.

Leave to amend a complaint must be freely give. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). However, the rule conditions its directive by adding "when justice so requires." Id. Therefore, a court need not grant leave to amend if the proposed amendment would be futile. Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182(1962); Betty Hiar v. Beverly Hingston, Case No. 95-1703(6th Cir. Sept. 5, 1996), unreported, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 25332 *8.

The proposed amended complaint submitted by the plaintiff seeks to assert a due process claim. The alleged due process claim is based solely on the allegation that the defendant did not mail the notice of violation, which included an explanation of the right to appeal, until after the expiration of the seven day time limit to appeal.

However, the defendant's policy states that an appeal may be submitted within seven days of RECEIPT of the letter.¹ Thus, the date of mailing is irrelevant to determining the time limit for the administration appeal. Therefore, the proposed amendment would be futile and the plaintiff's motion for leave to file an amended complaint must be denied.

Respectfully submitted
